The Spook Who Sat by the Door
Sam Greenlee
A classic in the black literary tradition, The Spook Who Sat by the Door is both a comment on the civil rights problems in the United States in the late 60s and a serious attempt to focus on the issue of black militancy. As a story of one man's reaction to ruling-class hypocrisy, the book is autobiographical and personal. As a tale of a man's reaction to oppression, it is universal.

Negroes with Guns
Robert F. Williams
Foreword by Gloria House
Introduction by Timothy B. Tyson
First published in 1962, Negroes with Guns is the story of a southern black community's struggle to arm itself in self-defense against the Ku Klux Klan and other racist groups. Frustrated and angered by violence condoned or abetted by the local authorities against blacks, the small community of Monroe, North Carolina, brought the issue of armed self-defense to the forefront of the civil rights movement. The single most important intellectual influence on Huey P. Newton, the founder of the Black Panther Party, Negroes with Guns is a classic story of a man who risked his life for democracy and freedom.

The Autobiography of William Sanders Scarborough
An American Journey from Slavery to Scholarship
Edited with an Introduction by Michele Valerie Ronnick
Foreword by Henry Louis Gates, Jr.
“It is uplifting to discover in this fascinating life, so compellingly narrated, a refutation of the racist view that a black man was genetically incapable of learning Greek, and at the same so clearly to see precisely the effects of such learning on this likable and able man. Like the Roman poet Horace, he too the son of an ex-slave, Scarborough reveals to us a personality imbued with culture, humanism and compassion.”

Race and Remembrance
A Memoir
Arthur L. Johnson
“Arthur L. Johnson is one of the unused heroes who created the new world of black and white America. For more than sixty years, he has given us a new sense of what creative, inclusive, and daring leadership can do. He came up from segregation, poverty, and a broken family and involved himself totally in a ministry of mannedness, overcoming family tragedies and confronting a late bout of Parkinson’s disease with his usual grace. You ought to know this man and his life story. He is one of the great yea-sayers and yea-makers of our times.”
—Lerone Bennett Jr., author, historian, and executive editor emeritus, Ebony Magazine

If We Must Die
From Bigger Thomas to Biggie Smalls
Aimé J. Ellis
“If We Must Die is a superbly nuanced exploration into black popular culture’s obsession with poor, urban-dwelling black men as simultaneously death-defiant and death-bound. Ellis presents an exciting new take on contemporary literary and mediated treatments of black masculinity and mortality, uncovering representations of agency, spectacle, and subversive opposition to dominant culture.”
—Robin R. Means Coleman

Redevelopment and Race
Planning a Finer City in Postwar Detroit
June Manning Thomas
“This is an extremely well-conceived and well-executed assessment of planning in Detroit from the 1940s through the early 1960s. It not only gives the reader a richly textured portrait of planning’s rocky ride during this tumultuous era, but it also helps to explain why city leaders proved unable to halt the process of urban decline, even though there were so many resources thrown at the problem. This book can become one of the important books in planning history, urban history, African-American history, and urban studies.”
—Christopher Silver, Virginia Commonwealth University
